DISCLAIMER

Forecast closing date: 7 February 2022

Report closing date: 20 April 2022

Euromonitor International's Consumer Foodservice research took place before the invasion of Ukraine. As such, the impact of the war in Ukraine and sanctions on Russia are not factored into our forecast data and analysis. The repercussions of the crisis and implications at a wider regional/global level will be addressed in the near- to mid-terms by Euromonitor International, through commentary and reports which will be published on both Euromonitor.com and our Passport platform.

Despite the war in Ukraine, Consumer Foodservice in Eastern Europe is expected to continue to show signs of recovery in 2022, with the removal of most pandemic restrictions. However, extremely high inflation rates are the main threat to recovery, and these rates are likely to accelerate due to the invasion of Ukraine, which has placed additional pressure on both food and energy prices. The war will also limit the number of incoming tourists into the region, an important consideration in boosting consumer foodservice value sales. Furthermore, as a result of the ongoing situation, local consumers across the region are currently less inclined to go out to eat, while donations to support Ukraine are becoming commonplace in shopping baskets, with a subsequent impact on discretionary income. All of these factors will slow the return to pre-pandemic growth levels, meaning recovery is unlikely to happen before the end of 2023 at the earliest.
